Check out the Joshua vs. Franklin results below. Anthony Joshua will return to action today in London, facing Jermaine Franklin in a heavyweight main event from the O2 Arena, live on DAZN. We'll be here from 2 pm ET for live updates, highlights, and results of the main card, plus round-by-round for the main event, all in this stream: Former two-time heavyweight titleholder Anthony Joshua will look to snap a two-fight losing skid on Saturday, when he returns in London to face Jermaine Franklin in a DAZN main event. Will Joshua (24-3, 22 KO) get big results from his work with new trainer Derrick James, or can Franklin (21-1, 14 KO) pull a big upset and make himself a top name in the heavyweight ranks following his own close loss to Dillian Whyte in November? Scott Christ (24-14) I think we see AJ come to make a statement in this one, and I think he's going to be looking to do damage early and often. I don't think there's much coming back from Franklin that is going to give him big pause; not saying that can't be dangerous, because even if Franklin isn't a puncher, he is still a big man, and you don't want to just get jaw-jacked clean by him. But I don't think Franklin will really even get the chances to get those shots off. Joshua isn't just a better puncher, he's also a better athlete and isn't some clueless, lumbering bozo, and Franklin can box, but he's not exactly Usyk or even Andy Ruiz, I don't think. AJ gets some heat back on his career in dominant fashion. Joshua TKO-4 RELATED Bet on Anthony Joshua (-1200) or Jermaine Franklin (+700) plus more boxing at DraftKings Sportsbook! Wil Esco (27-11) In a lot of respects I genuinely give credit to Anthony Joshua. The man has made a shit-ton of money in this sport and it would be easy for him to sort of walk away and enjoy the rest of his life without worrying about getting hit upside the head. And considering the recent losses he's had I'm not sure anyone would really blame him if he did so. But Joshua actually seems to have a burning desire to leave no stone unturned in an attempt to maximize his fighting career, and puts himself in uncomfortable situations in order to accomplish this. Recently Joshua has been training out of Texas without the glitz and glam, nor a spotlight, nor a truly marquee opponent that the world will be truly excited about. Despite this, Joshua is putting forth what I understand to be his best effort to find whatever's missing, whatever can get him back to the pinnacle. Whether or not he actually finds it is one question, but I can't knock the man for his passion. Jermaine Franklin is a decent and fairly sturdy opponent, but I don't think he'll really have the gears to push past just having some competitive rounds with Anthony Joshua, who while maybe not an elite talent is still probably above that of Franklin. I think this is the level of fight that Joshua has proven he can conquer, but it's the elite level where he'll fall short. Joshua UD-12 John Hansen (29-9) If this isn't unanimous, I'll be amazed. Anthony Joshua knocked out a 27-year-old, undefeated Dillian Whyte. Jermaine Franklin fought the best fight of his life to go distance and lose cards to a diminished, mid-30s version of Dillian Whyte. Levels, etc., and these guys aren't on the same one. This is all about getting back on track for Anthony Joshua, and testing out whatever he's been working on in Texas under new trainership. If the outcome were in any serious doubt, someone else would be getting served up as Joshua's "Get Well Soon!" greeting card instead. Ideally, Joshua looks so good and feels so comfortable that we move directly into a top level fight for him before the end of 2023. Joyce? Dubois? Wilder? Someone else in that general range? Let this fight be a quick stepping stone back to that sort of spotlight for AJ. Getting a signed and executed fight contract with Tyson Fury these days is harder than getting into Narnia, so I won't hold my breath for that. Joshua TKO-8 Patrick Stumberg (29-9) Joshua has everything he needs to win this fight. Franklin is the latest solid, well-schooled boxer in a career that's seen Joshua beat a number of them, from Joseph Parker to Alexander Povetkin to Kubrat Pulev; on paper, this is not hing Joshua
